A. System Overview. The ELDEN RING fantasy roleplaying game has been developed for online play by the game developer, Cygames Co. Ltd. 1) Player Experience. (1.1) The game's original content is the player's fantasy, and the game's nature is completely free. (1.2) The player's fantasy is realized with their character, an avatar in the game. The avatar's appearance, role in the world, and movements are completely free to be developed as the player wishes. (1.3) The game also allows players to freely choose to be the party leader or to be accompanied by a party member, making it possible for players of different play styles to play together. (1.4) In addition, the game also allows players to freely select a character that they feel connected with. (1.5) The game will have content in which players who have different play styles are allowed to play together. (1.6) Many of the events in the game occur one-on-one and are not directly communicated with the other party members. (1.7) Also, due to the asynchronous online nature of the game, players can play while playing together with others as a party. The additional content planned for the ELDEN RING will be communicated, but players are also free to take on new events and locations by being a member of other groups. (1.8) The story of the game will be based around the connection between the individual players. 2) Content Development and Organizational Structure. The game will be constantly updated and redeveloped to maintain its original nature. (2.1) The developer and the producer are the ELDEN RING game's main producer and producer, respectively. (2.2) The game director and the game producer are responsible for the gameplay and production of the game, respectively. (2.3) The game director and the game producer are not directly involved in the production of the game. 3) Development Team. The game will be developed with the consideration of accessibility and an enjoyable game experience. Cygames Co., Ltd. Head Office Tokyo, Japan © Cygames All Rights Reserved.

==================================Case-control study of solid oral cancer risk factors. To investigate the effect of tobacco, alcohol and dietary factors on solid oral cancer incidence and outcomes in Ontario. The sample used in this case-control study consisted of newly diagnosed cases of solid oral cancer and controls who were selected from the general population. Cases were drawn from Ontario Cancer Registries; controls, selected from the general population in Ontario, were frequency matched on year of birth and sex. A total of 649 cases and 1216 controls were interviewed by telephone. The subjects were asked to provide information on their health practices (including tobacco, alcohol and diet), socio-demographic characteristics and prior medical history. An increased risk of solid oral cancer was associated with heavy drinking (OR = 2.5), drinking frequency (OR > or = 2) and drinking level (OR > or = 3). A protective effect of alcohol was observed among smokers (OR = 0.4), heavy smokers (OR = 0.4) and heavy smokers with heavy drinking (OR = 0.4). A protective effect of fruit and vegetable consumption was observed among heavy smokers (OR = 0.6). Fruit and vegetable consumption was also associated with a lower risk of solid oral cancer among smokers (OR = 0.7). Smoking and heavy drinking appear to be the most important risk factors for solid oral cancer, while fruit and vegetable consumption may play a protective role.Irradiation of uterine cervix with low dose rate radioactive sources. We compared the clinical effect of low dose rate (LDR) and high dose rate (HDR) 137Cs irradiation of uterine cervix with the aim to find an effective alternative treatment method for cervical intraepithelial neoplasia (CIN) with acceptable morbidity. From January 1999 to December 2000, 194 patients with CIN I-II, III, and carcinoma in situ of cervix uteri were recruited to receive either LDR or HDR irradiation. They were irradiated with the same external radiation dose delivered in 4-6 hours in LDR group, and in an average of only 35 seconds in HDR group. At the end of irradiation, a complete colposcopy was performed
