The Cardboard Engine - A card-based RPG that’s being built from the ground up! About MasterX Steam Community Profile Bio My name is Alex... Jedi, Warlord or just a typical Indie-artist. I belong to the great occident and I currently reside in the middenlands. The first E-RPG that I ever played was at the age of 11 and that game was the Secret of Mana. Ever since then I have been hooked on something related to the genre. Since then I have fallen in love with various genres, from the Classic-heavy Diablo series to the sci-fi of Mass Effect. But as I was already writing down my dreams, I soon figured out that writing down my dreams wouldn't be enough to make them a reality. So I started crafting my first E-RPG. As it always happens with projects in progress, not every move was smooth and so it has been quite the roller coaster ride since the creation of Secret of Mana. In 2013 I opened up a new development studio with a goal to create my first true E-RPG. We have also decided to add some sandbox style to the base game. This will consist of crafting, building and survival mechanics, and customization of spaces in the world, based on the position of your current character. I have worked with some really awesome people and we have learned a lot along the way. To begin with, we want to thank our early test players who have helped us by checking our game out and giving us their thoughts and constructive criticism. It has been very educational and a big part of getting us where we are now. We want to give special thanks to those test players that have been with us in our journey: Spimoman, Tuxetic, Dafydd, R.O.N, Nordforsker, all the guys on Steam (jk.) and of course, Alpem. Ride the wave! Client Specs: Supported OS: Windows 7, 8, 10, and MacOS 10,10.9, and newer. Minimum System Requirements: CPU: 2x Intel Core i7 or equivalent Core 2 Quad CPU. #### What's new:

not just a new mmo but a breathe of fresh air into the old established mmo's My real name is Ned, a typical 18-year-old guy on the island of Manhattan, I've been playing GW2 in korean only for a month now but this game is completely different and very worth playing. It's a lot of fun. If you think it's WoW or other PvE style games then no I am not talking about that and here is why. This game is like an MMO but when you talk to your neighbors they are NPCs and they have their own size of line of dialogue and stuff. People are real! You can talk to them and play arm wrestling with them or just ask for directions in the Shouting system. Here is an example of NPCs you will see all the time which is the woman who is peddling goods. The NPC is a person (and in some cases, an actual person) that you can talk to. NPCs are akin to other characters in a persistent world role-playing game. Unlike other people in a persistent world role-playing game, NPCs can store items in their inventory and wear them, and interact with you in any way you like; whether it be shopping, chatting or being completely ignoring you. Third-person NPC Rendering "And", says game director Colin Johanson, "There are three qualities that define what we call a third-person NPC. First, they're completely animated; any phrase they say is delivered with a seamless, real-time response. Second, there's no delay between a spoken phrase and an animated gesture, and finally NPCs don't have unrealistic weight. They interact gracefully with the world around them." Source In this game you are the head of a guild and you have to complete quests, most of them in 3D instanced islands, and there are several Bosses in the game that you gain levels from and get a reward of new spells which depends on level. I picked up a scroll in the game that when I used it it would spray these odd colorful globs onto the ground. Then as I went around they disipated into random graphical shapes. The game is full of stuff like this. The characters will talk and you get to choose your words if you want to be their friend, or ignore them just like in the real world. It's a very different system. Character Creation from Video Games They create a character in game
