The first was held on 26 May on the agreement on the Antarctic Treaty on 20 December 1967, and was rejected by voters. The second was held on 10 June on a law to introduce Parliamentary Socialism, and was also rejected. The third was held on 3 November on a new law on cantonal education, and was approved. The final was held on 27 December on a law to raise the minimum retirement age for civil servants, and was approved. Or maybe it's the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee? Or maybe it's the chairman of the House Financial Services Committee? No, it's actually Adam Schiff, whose job is to be the House Intelligence Committee chairman. Does anyone actually think that Schiff (and by the way, none of these titles are officially part of his name) would have the nerve to accuse any future occupant of the White House, Democrat or Republican, of lying? The man knows very well that any such accusations would be about as effective as a flea on a pig. 0cc13bf012
