BRUSSELS (Reuters) - The European Union rejected on Tuesday Turkey's request for visa-free travel for its citizens in EU countries, citing the risk of illegal migration. The 28-country bloc is also imposing new travel restrictions on Turkey, including on travel agencies, tour operators and public transport companies, as part of the measures. In a joint statement, the European Commission and EU foreign policy chief Federica Mogherini said Turkey's adherence to a deal agreed last year to curb illegal migration into the bloc remained unsatisfactory. "We are imposing targeted measures on individuals who, as designated entities, facilitate irregular travel or people smuggling, as well as on travel agencies and other such providers," they said.

Turkey was the single biggest source of migrants, asylum seekers and irregular travelers to the EU last year, with more than 690,000 people. The agreement, agreed by Turkey and the EU, had led to a sharp drop in the number of migrants arriving in Greece, the main gateway to Europe, and for registered asylum seekers. But the accord has failed to stop a new flow of migrants and people seeking to reach other countries in the bloc.

Overall, the number of migrants crossing the Mediterranean from Libya, to Europe, rose to 185,100 in 2018, from 49,730 in 2017. Turkey has said it would not abide by the measures, underlining the importance of the deal. "The agreement covers the practical application of the visa liberalization procedure. Visa free access is not an end in itself but is indeed a means to what we want the whole area to be," EU Migration Commissioner Dimitris Avramopoulos said. "Every measure we take to make the visa liberalization effective will be taken based on the agreement," he added. V 1cdb36666d
