They write that while most mental health conditions are treatable, not everyone will seek help, and in some cases the problem can escalate. The authors say that the rate of people seeking treatment for mental health issues has "rapidly increased" from a point in the 1980s where mental health issues were largely ignored. The latest data from the Australian Bureau of Statistics (ABS) showed that, in 2012-13, the rate of people who sought mental health treatment was 14.7 per cent, up from 12.8 per cent in the previous 12 months. "We expect more people will want treatment for their mental health problems, and our psychological wellbeing levels will also rise," said the authors. It's not the first time the body has been forced to respond to the problem of increased mental illness. The nation's response to the rising numbers of people seeking assistance in the 1980s saw a series of events including the introduction of a new mental health
