Congress's prepared to give the federal government $38 billion in additional funding, the White House proposed more than $2 billion for NASA, and the moon rocks are on the way. SPACE.com and NASA -- and, by proxy, the space industry -- got plenty of attention yesterday after newly revealed budgets of the two organizations looked pretty much the same. But just a few months ago, one of us (Frank) was in the visitor's center at the Johnson Space Center's famed Mission

Control Center in Houston -- on the same floor where you can see the Apollo spacecraft and space suits and that keep-out-of-our-way glass door you've seen in movies -- and another (John) visited the Grand Canyon's North Rim and took some amazing pictures that were featured the day after President Obama was inaugurated. Here are two pictures that illustrate the closeness of space and politics: Copyright: Mark Wade | NASA Copyright: Mark Wade | NASA So our difference of opinion on the Earth to moon timeline comes from experience with NASA and with our space-industry colleagues. They know what it takes to get a project done, they know the hours and days and weeks that are lost while a system is being built, they know the pressures that come when a customer complains or an investigation gets underway. We're not experts -- we're space fans like you. The hype machine is going full steam -- seriously full steam -- ahead as the media on Monday churned out several pages of new space stories, starting with the President's announcement on Friday that he'd be sending the first woman to the moon. The lunar lander, dubbed the Lunar Atmosphere and Dust Environment Explorer, or LADEE, will be one of five

The economy is recovering, albeit slowly, from the recession. Yet unemployment remains at a four decade high of 9.4 percent, and the average worker makes a mere $22,800 per year. How do we fix that? With the recent wave of austerity measures in the United Kingdom, several politicians are calling for nationalizing industries, including the energy sector. Their aim? Save the country and make the economy safer and more stable — and, of course, less expensive. But what happens when the government owns an industry, such as when we nationalize our oil reserves? Most of us believe it will be worth more than it is presently, since it will hold a supply of crude that no one can buy. However, there are far more factors at play here than simply the price of the oil. We Shouldn't Nationalize the Oil Industry British economist John Maynard Keynes, an economic visionary of the 20th century, said: "Practical men who believe themselves to be quite exempt from any intellectual influence, are usually
