This site does not store any files on its server. We only index and link to content provided by other sites. On the menu of every page you'll find the name of the site or the author of the content. You go to the page of the content and you leave this site. Your IP address will be. But we see from your computer you have not got an own IP-Address. It was assigned to your provider by a router in your Internet-Provider. So you have to make sure you have an active Internet-connection on your computer. The url of a content, the name of a file and its relative url like ../../../../someimage.png are examples of such a url. It might be of help to get to know more about the Web. Here are some Web-pages. An internet search engine can help you to find what you need. (see also search engines). The IP-number of a website is displayed in a browser address-bar. It doesn't mean anything. The only thing you should know about that number is that it is allocated to your computer by your Internet-Service Provider. (see also IP numbers). To find out more about the topic of the Web address of a page, search the internet. A search in google is easy. It includes using your favorite search engine. In google type the word or the name of the page you want to get. e.g. free music, free james bond titles, freebooks, free graphics, etc. Don't pay attention to advertisements. It's misleading. If a website would tell you to pay money to get something free, you won't find that site on any web-searching search engine. For example type "free music" in google. Then scroll down the list. Click in the search box. Type "". To get to the website, click in the link called "". There you get the message: "All files on this site are free to download" "All links on this website are free to copy". It's misleading, so ignore it. Take a look at the copied banner on the top of this text. It's illegal. The banner is a so called pop-up advertisement. The banner appears

 Playwright, Actor, Cartoonist and Guitar Player By David Swanson When I was growing up in the 1970s, I first heard Julian Lage at the source: on the radio at night when I would listen to Johnny Mathis, Kris Kristofferson, or Joni Mitchell. He was a featured performer on the "Music of the '70s" program with, I am sad to say, no one as brilliant as he. A few years later, I heard him on the Merv Griffin Show as a member of the ensemble. Then I heard him again on the Merv Griffin Show as a soloist on his instrumental album "Lage Music" (1995). That was my introduction to him. During this time, I also discovered the work of David Dalton 0cc13bf012

Q: Looping through database, sp_who2 shows 2 connections I have SQL Server that is usually running fine, however last night I noticed that my connection had been dropped every 5 minutes from the same IP address. I didn't think it was a good idea to reboot so I checked my connection string in Visual Studio and got the following error: "The operation failed". After fixing my connection string, I checked my database and noticed that there were exactly two connections opened up to that database, one by application name myApp and another by user myUser. I used sp_who2 to look up my 2 connections, which is what prompted me to log off and restart the application. After that, my application didn't work until I ended the app pool, stopping and then restarting it cleared this problem out. However, I am still very curious as to why there is an extra connection, and how long I was connected to it. I'm pretty certain that I'm not actively using the connection, so I'd appreciate any insight anyone can give.

Thanks! A: The internal database engine caches connections to speed up performance when you perform a query without an explicit connection. If you browse your connections you will find lots of familiar names. The local server has different names for these connections. If the connection is unavailable, the agent will attempt to re-use the cached connection. When you are online and you perform a query against your database, the agent will create a new SQL Server connection to your database. You may be worried to close the external database connections since that means no data is available to the database engine. However, your connections are only cached when your application is making SQL queries. If you have a program that runs once in a while, you should not have problems. C-Track E-Filing
