but still the very big ticket items (the standard ones) peterwilco 2012-08-30, 18:13 sounds like we have a lot of the same problems, like i was going to say we need a wiki at least so we can know what we're asking for in the forums and answers it with the best reference bigbubba91 2012-08-30, 18:20 I agree we need a wiki. But what I was thinking about was making a poll-poll and collecting user feedback. Shocking. It would give us more insight into the bugs users are reporting and how to address them with changes to the game. If the current bug list has gotten a bit stale, maybe making a poll every time an APL bug is fixed or changed, or added to the list of bugs, and then tallying the results with our crash reports. Another thing to consider is that at the very beginning of this thread we were discussing getting a wiki. But in the meantime the dev team has made an effort to do this already, a setup is being established at At this moment, it does not have the flexibility of being able to track the status of individual bugs, but it does serve the purpose of tracking changes in general, and does allow us to search for topics.
