What happened with the Mobile Phone Verizon Contract? - It has been established with K2M. There is a lot of communication between K2M and Verizon with regard to the breakdown of the service to determine rates, features, and product. K2M has been utilizing an on-premises cabling solution and that is what the first phase of the contract was. In the case where they did not have the cabling solution, they utilized a network port solution. Next is the issue of how the service will be delivered to the customer, which is done through a device at the entry of the customer premise. Then there is the testing of the device, the installation, the training, billing, and other related issues that need to be addressed. Mrs. Crosby stated that Verizon has to be involved in the pre-ordering process to make sure their equipment is ready for the installation.

According to Mrs. Crosby, Verizon is also looking at the rates. A. All four networks use

Verizon Wireless' 2.5GHz spectrum and some other unlicensed UHF spectrum for EVDO. Sprint is also using Verizon Wireless' 2.5GHz spectrum in key markets such as Denver for its own EVDO services. A. In this case the CLECs would offer its customers

"value added services" using the 2.5GHz spectrum and then charge the customer for the unused 1xRTT and/or 1xEVDO spectrum in the 2.5GHz band, as was the case with the Verizon Wireless U.S. Proposal. Verizon Wireless has made
