Valerius Bellator Valerius Bellator (also known as Bellator and Lucius Valentinianus) was a Roman nobleman and Roman consul in 408 BC. He was the nephew of Emperor Arcadius. He was condemned in absentia and stripped of his property by the Roman people for his role in the death of Pope Boniface I. His name was taken as a feminine praenomen, a Roman epithet, and became Valeria. Life The year of his consulate was 408 BC, and his consular successor was Q. Fabius Maximus.

Death of Pope Boniface I Boniface I was chosen as pope in 589 BC. He is said to have been "the first pope who was not of the family of the gens Quirina or from the city of Rome." Boniface, however, was chosen not just from outside the city but from outside the state as well. Boniface gave his support to the Lamentations of the Roman nobility and to the recently deposed Emperor Theodosius II, but was imprisoned and thrown into the Tiber as the sign of humiliation. The Romans ordered that all prelates, priests and bishops of the Roman Catholic Church, including Boniface, should be banished. Valerius was given the task of administering the city's laws by the Roman people. Valerius is said to have been one of those who demanded that Pope Boniface be set free, and it was on his authority that Boniface was allowed to return to Rome. The other two authorities who demanded that Boniface be freed were the patrician Marcellinus and the Etruscan Valerius, son of Sallustius, who was a descendant of the dynasty of the kings of Etruria. Valerius and Marcellinus brought Boniface back from prison with great honors and festivities. Valerius also became a close friend of Boniface. He often visited Boniface in his exile, and took care of his daily needs as well. As

Home Minister Rajnath Singh has said the Centre was trying to make India more like a “real superpower” and not a “regional power”. “Yes, we are preparing our forces. You are quite right. The entire world is with us. We are getting very good feedback from the other countries on how we are responding to their problems,” Mr. Singh said when asked whether India was now a “superpower”. “India is a superpower. We are not an imperial power but a superpower,” he said when asked whether India was a superpower. During his interactions with academics, scientists, diplomats and industrialists, Mr. Singh stressed on the need for India to be more sensitive to the problems of the smaller nations and the problems of the underdeveloped nations. He said it was important that India responded to the plight of the refugees from the countries like Pakistan and Bangladesh who had fled to India after the 1971 war. “We can take the example of Bangladesh. India is not the only country that did not pay heed to their grievances. Even Britain did not respond adequately to their grievance. But after 1971, we took very good care of the refugees. We took care of them and made arrangements for their security. The refugees are settled in many parts of India,” he said. Mr. Singh said the Centre was doing its best to create an internal security apparatus to meet the security challenges in the country. “The Centre is taking steps to improve the internal security apparatus. So that we can react immediately to any situation. We have created four security formations and on the lines of US, they will be headed by the National Security Adviser,” he said. “We have created four battalions in the police, which can move immediately to any incident. But in fact there is a shortage of officers in the police. We are going to improve this in the next few days,” he said. The Home Minister said he had some understanding with China that it was important for India and China to stay at the same level and play their own role in
